New York, July 16.—The stock market opened strong on the prompt denial of further failures in the dry goods trade, and as the day advanced became broyant. There were heavy purchases by prominent operators, and the brokers reported increased orders from the smaller class of traders. still the chief topic of discussion, and the favorable character of the advices from the grain-growing regions was the principal factor in speculation at the stock exchange.

The increased export demand for cereals, as reflected in the weekly shipments from this port and the failing off in the visibly supply, have added to the bullish feeling, as did also dispatches to the effect that the Union Pacific earnings are improving, and that the land sales are simply enormous. The improvement in prices ranged from ½ to 4½ per cent, the Vanderbilts, the grangers, Lackawanna, and Pacific Mail being the features. Speculation continued strong until after 2 p. m., when New York Central fell off to 10½ on reports of trouble in the trunk line pool over the distribution of percentages. The decline in the remainder of the list was less important, and ranged from ½ to 1½ per cent, in the final sales there was a recovery of ½ to ½ per cent, and the market closed firm. During the afternoon some New York Central was brought in under the rule.

Raffway bonds were generally firm.

Cleveland did not recover from the shock for several months, and though he has a bachelor's liking for pretty ladies, his friends say that he will never marry. One lady became so infatuated with him that she praposed to him. He rejected her advances, and it is said that she peams crays and is now confined in an became crazy, and is now confined in an asylum.

Gov. Cleveland has always been of a retiring disposition and most of his time has been spent in his law library or in the company of bachelor friends.

His most frequent places of resort were the City club and the high-toned Buffalo club on Delaware avenue. There he was accustomed years ago to spend most of his evenings playing cards and telling or listening to stories told by a coterio com posed of the late Hon. Hammon S. Cutting, the late John Allen, vice president of the Central and Hudson railroad, and other unmarried gentlemen.

A friend of the governor tells a romantic story of how a lady living near Pough-keepsie engaged in correspondence with the governor since he was elected mayor, and that a tender feeling had sprung up between them. They have met but four times, once whon Cleveland was sheriff, a few years later at Saratoga, after Cloveland was elected mayor, and once since he has been governor. This friend said that it was quite likely that the laily would be married by Cleveland if elected presi-dent; and that she would grace the white house partors at his reception. The lady is described as being a charming brunette, about 35 years old, with pleasing manners and considerable property. Inquiry among other friends verified the story, but no one would tell the lady's name or just where she lived, except that it was in a small town near Poughkeepsie.

A HUNGARIAN LASSIE. Her Romantic Adventures in Search of Her Lost Lover.

New York Sun Nicol Petroffski is dark skinned, dark haired, dark eyed, and 23 years of age. About a year ago he crossed the sea from Bremen. His home was in southern Hungary, where he left a sweetheart when he turned his face westward. He found work turned his face westward. He found work on the new Schuyikill Valley railroad. He was thrifty and economical and soon saved money enough to enable him to keep his promise, which was to send cash sufficient to enable his sweetheart to come to him in America. Marie Taschellagh waited patiently until her lover sent for her, and when she received money enough to pay her passage she bravely undertook the journey alone. She traveled a long distance from her country home by rail to Bremen and there embarked for America. All her baggage was in a bag and bundle.

Bremen and there embarked for America.
All her baggage was in a bag and bundle.
In due time she arrived at New York, but was greatly disappointed at finding no one at Castle Garden to receive her. Her father, who is also in America, and her lover both promised to be there. She could speak no. English, but a garden official promptly put her on the train for Reading and wrote a letter to her father.

A Bear Story To has the Catchill advising him of her coming. This letter advising him of her coming. This letter was not received promptly, because the men worked several miles below the city herself understood. She finally shoul-dered her baggage and attracted a great deal of attention as she tramped through the streets away from the station. She was directed down one street, up another, then across the river, and then deen the country, from point to point, until she had walked about nine miles, four of which were along the new railroad. She continued her journey from gang to gang, but received no tidings from those she sought.

At length she reached a cut where a dozen swarthy foreigners were at work. Suddenly a young man dropped his shovel, leaped from the cut, ran up the hill, and the next moment the young woman screaused, dropped her bundle, and Nicol and Marie were clasped in each other's arms. Her father, who was also working in the same gang, rushed up and welcomed his child, and when the other Hungarians and Poles heard the news they hurashed for joy. Marie then dethey hurrahed for joy. Marie then de-manded to know why they did not meet her at the ship, and, when the men had brushed away their tears and found their brushed away their tears and found their voices, they explained that they had not expected the ship until the following week. After the excitement was over, Marie sat down and had a good cry, and her lover joined in. The next day they were married, and are now running a boarding shanty. They have five boarders, and have high hopes of soon making money enough to buy a little farm.

PINKERTON'S METHODS. The Accusing Blood That Led a Murderer to Commit Suicide.

"I was just thinking," said Capt. R. J. Linden, superintendent of Pinkerton's detective agency, on his return from Chicago where he had been attending the funeral of Allan Pinkerton, "of the wonderful will power, and untiring persoverance of the man whose body was laid to rest last Thursday. Very few persons, unless they were intimately associated with him, would believe that associated with him, would believe that any person could possess such a paticat persistence, which surmounted obstacles that to ordinary men would appear like impassable mountains. Maj. Pinkerton was a man with a big heart. I don't think he knew how to do a mean thing. He was one of these honorable fair-He was one of those honorable fair-minded men, who, while giving every-body their due, exacted the same for himself. In matters of business he insisted on getting every penny that be-longed to him, and once he made a promise it was lived up to if it cost him every penny he owned in the world. His likes and dislikes were intense. If he became your friend, no amount of calumny on the part of your enemy could change his opinion; but if he disliked you, neither arguments nor entreaties

His mind was wondorfully fertile in expedients, and it was a rave thing for him to fail when he had once set his mind upon success. You can form some idea of his ready tact and capacity for planning in the case of the colored murderer Johnson, of South Carolina, who killed an enemy under the most brutal circumstance Maj. Pinkerton was pretty positive as to the man's guilt, but it was impossible to obtain a complete chain of evidence. With the natural secretiveness of his

with the natural secretiveness of his race Johnson refused to fall into any of the man traps iaid for him and make a confession, which was Pinkerton's object.

"After weeks of patient but abertive work a novel plan was hit upon. The murderer was surprised one morning when he went to take a plow into a field to find it spattered with blood. In the open field where he was to work the murderer found little pools of blood along the course he was to plow. When he went back to the stable he was startled by seeing the bloody imprint of a human hand on the stable door. Every hoe or rake or other farm implement that the man picked up had blood on it. When nightfall came the murderer was so paraiysed with fear that his teeth were chattering and he was afraid to go to bed. He believed that the spirit of his victim was haunting him. The detective and his assistant noted these symptoms, and were confident that the right plan had been struck at last. It had been, after a fashion, and there was a horrible proof given the next day. Johnson was found fashion, and there was a horrible proof given the next day. Johnson was found in the barn with his throat cut from ear to car. He had killed himself rather than endure the tortures of a guilty conscience. I need not explain that the blood marks which frightened the murderer's guilty soul were the work of the detectives and not of spirits. "It was in that kind of detective work that Maj. Pinkerton excelled. I only heard of one story in this neighborhood of a man being attacked by a bear. It happened in 1865 to a man named Wey, a carpenter, who was crossing the hills after some work. On a ledge path on Slide mountain he met a great big brown fellow, and there was not room for bear and man to pass without exchanging hostilities. Wey began the war, so he relates, by hitting brain on the snort. The bear made a rush for his adversary. seized him in his embrace, and proceeded to roll down hill with him.

'Bear and man went over and over down the bluff, until they suddenly came to a halt on a block of rock which stood to a nait on a block of rock which stood in their down course. The crash was principally received by the bear, but Wey lost consciousness for a while, from the result of the close squeezing of the powerful animal as much as anything else. When he came to be found the bear's paws had relaxed from his body, and after a cautious movement or two and, after a cautious movement or two, he raised himself to a standing position. The bear did not move. He stooped and examined the animal; it was dead.

At a loss to account for so sudden a de liverance. Wey hastened down the mountain to Guigou's tannery, and soon induced a couple of men to return with him far bruin's carcas. It was brought home in triumph, and when weighed tipped the beam at 345 pounds. The cause of its death was fracture of the skull. Such was the force with which the animal cranium had come into contact with th rock that death ensued almost instanta-neously. Wey's deliverance looked like a miracle.

Massachusetts Blue Bloods.

It is not a political revolt, so much as it is a social accession. It is a protest of the aristocratic bundreds against the choice of the democratic millions. Its crice and its shibboloths are all those of a select caste asserting its own social and moral superiority. The republican party in this state has everything to gain and in this state has everything to gain and nothing to less by a continuance of these arrogaut pretensions. It was born here as a party of the people. Its first Massachusetts triumph was over exactly the same aristecratic faction which, in the process of years, crept into its communion, and is now threatening to yacate the front seats in which its leaders have been for some time analysis, then have been for some time enjoying them-selves. If they go, the masses, whose sympathy with the republican party has weakened year by year exactly in pro-portion as the spirit of old federalism has seized upon it and marked it as the aristogratic party, will move back in more than compensating numbers.

THE REPUBLICAN FOR THE CAMPAIGN

A great political contest is now in progress which involves the highest interests of the country and the material well being of all its citizens. The Republican Party, under its noble leaders, James G. Blaine and John A. Logan, is making an aggressive and spirited campaign. Every citizen ought to keep himself fully advised of the great political movements that are in progress to the end that he may be able to judge intelligently as to the candidates for whom he should
